Mrs. Ursula Von Der Leyen
President
European Commission

Madrid, March 7th

Dear Mrs. Von Der Leyen:

Upon my recent appointment as CEO of Enagás, I would like to convey by means of this letter my availability for support in whatever matter you might consider that my company and myself could be of help.

Enagás is the Spanish gas TSO (Transmission System Operator) and we are an international standard bearer in the development and maintenance of gas infrastructures as well as the operation and management of gas networks. Over the course of our company's history, we have built the main infrastructures for the Spanish Gas System transforming it into a benchmark for security and diversification of supply. In Europe we are also shareholders of the Trans Adriatic Pipeline and we actively participate in its operation.

Enagás is firmly committed to the European project, and we work every day to strengthen it. We are fully aware of our responsibility, as energy independence and security of supply are a necessary and indispensable condition for achieving greater sovereignty and strategic autonomy, and it is also urgent to continue moving decisively towards a net zero scenario in 2050.

We share the vision of the European institutions and, in particular, regarding the need to move towards a common energy policy and greater integration. The importance of this has been made even clearer by the ongoing dramatic events in Ukraine.

Likewise, we believe that only from the strength of the European Union's unity can we face a challenge of global dimensions such as climate change and companies must be at the forefront towards a more sustainable future.

Enagás is playing an important role in the extent that we are promoting new sources of energy such as hydrogen and other renewable gases, while guaranteeing a transition as clean and competitive as possible.

Finally, reiterating Enagás' firm commitment to the European project, we again take this opportunity to stress our availability for whatever the European Commission may require.

Looking forward to meeting you personally.
