The Commission signaled that EU policy is not targeting any country or entity in particular and aims at treating everyone equally. Open RAN developments are part of a more general trend of using software based interfaces. The very recent Chips Act is intending to give some additional capacity (targeting 20% global market share for EU from a current 10%) in order to ensure supply security.

Huawei expressed understanding about EU security/sovereignty concerns and expressed the will to keep the process ongoing by not further amplifying the current geopolitics issues.
