Abolition of the death penalty
The EU considers the death penalty to be a cruel, inhuman and irreversible punishment, which fails to deter criminal behaviour and represents an unacceptable denial of human dignity and integrity. Yet, thousands of executions are carried out every year. More than 50 countries still retain capital punishment for a variety of crimes.

The EU opposes the death penalty in all circumstances, and works for its universal abolition. It lobbies for the immediate establishment of a moratorium on the use of the death penalty as a step towards abolition. Where the death penalty still exists, the EU calls for its use to be progressively restricted and carried out according to minimum standards. The fight against the death penalty is an integral part of the EU's human rights policy. It has played a key role in the emerging positive trend in favour of abolition, and has funded specific projects implemented by non-governmental organisations.

The EU's political commitment is reinforced by the European Instrument for Democracy and Human Rights. The EIDHR support for civil society organisations seeks, inter alia, to raise awareness in retentionist countries through public education, outreach to influence public opinion, and studies to see whether death penalty systems in force comply with minimum standards. Other priorities are to secure access for death row inmates to appropriate levels of legal support, and to train lawyers. This 2007–2010 Compendium lists 21 projects for a total value of nearly €10 million. In the decade from 2000 to 2010, 50 projects were funded at an overall cost of €23 million.

Fight against torture
Torture is among the most abhorrent violations of human rights and human dignity.

In line with its guidelines on torture (adopted in 2001 and updated in 2008), the EU is committed to the absolute prohibition of torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment. In this context, it has taken initiatives in international fora, intervened diplomatically with non-EU countries and increasingly taken up individual cases.

The EU provides substantial funding for projects by civil society actors around the world working to eradicate torture and ill-treatment. The prevention of torture and the rehabilitation of torture survivors is a major priority of the European Instrument for Democracy and Human Rights.

In the last five years, an annual average of €12 million has been allocated to funding anti-torture projects, making the EIDHR a leading source of funding for torture prevention and the rehabilitation of victims worldwide. Between 2007 and 2010, the EIDHR supported more than 80 projects. Of these, 55 were selected from a global call for proposals and more than 30 from the EIDHR’s country-based support schemes.

Projects have resulted in:
- raising awareness of the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture (OPCAT)
- investigations into the supply of torture technology
- the development of torture prevention and monitoring networks
- the creation of national prevention mechanisms to monitor places of detention
- support for the rehabilitation of torture victims and the fight against impunity.
Mary Verzulli’s 29 year old sister was one of eight women murdered by a serial killer in New York. She says she had never thought much about the death penalty until the District Attorney asked how she felt about it. “I couldn’t imagine what, if anything, could lessen my pain or despair” she says, “But I knew it wasn’t that.” With her sister’s killer serving life sentences, Mary’s testimony is taken from a gallery of victims’ stories displayed by Murder Victims Families for Human Rights.

Supported by the EU, the gallery puts real faces on victim opposition to the death penalty by presenting photos and statements of murder victims and survivors, challenging the common assumption that anyone who has lost a family member to murder is in favour of capital punishment.

Death penalty is a profound violation of human rights. Defying the notion that executions are the way to achieve justice or closure, MSVHR is involved in a worldwide movement to abolish the death penalty.

Testimony ranges from families affected by the 9/11 terrorist attacks in New York to that of Hector and Susie Black, who told the sentencing judge they did not want the death sentence for the man who raped and killed their daughter in 2000, to Robert Meeropol, whose parents Julius and Ethel Rosenberg were executed for espionage in 1953 when he was six years old, accused of passing information about the atomic bomb – a decision that was and still is controversial.

Founder and Executive Director Renny Cushing’s own father was killed by two shotgun blasts fired by a stranger. Already opposed to the death penalty before his father’s murder, Cushing states: “For me to change my beliefs because my father was murdered would only give more power to his killers, for then they would take not only his life but also his main legacy to me: the values he instilled.”

The European Union is founded on the principles of freedom, democracy, respect for human rights and the rule of law. Human rights and democracy are inextricably linked. Only in a democracy can individuals fully attain their human rights; only when human rights are respected can democracy flourish.

In supporting democratisation, the EU recognises the crucial importance of the widest participation in political decision-making and of the local ownership of development processes.

The EU supports locally-driven democratisation processes and initiatives through an appropriate mix of financial and political instruments adapted to the specific situation of each country, as long as such initiatives are compatible with international human rights standards. While EU geographic programmes ensure institutional support for national reform processes and democratic institution-building, the EIDHR supports local actions to empower disenfranchised groups, promoting dialogue and mediation between diverse interests within societies, and encouraging political pluralism, transparency, accountability and consultation.

Where the political environment seriously restricts civil society, we aim to promote human rights and protect democracy activists, by supporting freedom of opinion and expression, freedom of association and peaceful assembly, freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, and freedom of movement.

To support local democracy-building, the EIDHR works with a wide range of partners, from grass-roots organisations to international parliamentary associations, and from advocacy and watch-dog organisations to political foundations, trade unions and the media.

Democracy-building and the rule of law is the largest area of activity of the EIDHR. More than €300 million (60% of the total) were spent in 2007-2010 to promote democracy and fundamental freedoms worldwide. Of this amount, election observation missions accounted for €131 million.

During this period, more than 220 projects were funded on core democracy-building activities for a total value of more than €40 million (for example, voter education and participation of women in parliamentary elections). Most of these projects are listed in the compendium, giving a broad idea of the range of activities financed by the EIDHR.

Many other projects contribute to the spread of democratic values. Nearly 100 projects costing €62 million were funded in countries where human rights are most at risk, €40 million were allocated to projects supporting freedom of expression and association, while another 114 projects worth nearly €38 million targeted human rights education and strengthened civil society organisations. With the exception of some 100 projects which are considered confidential, extensive information on these projects is provided in the relevant thematic chapters.

The projects implemented so far have brought about legislative changes (electoral legislation in Moldova or the ratification and implementation of the Rome Statute by Chile); better information, media monitoring, and transparency of elections (the Philippines); strengthening parliaments and political parties (Yemen and Tajikistan); and increased participation of under-represented groups in decision making and/or political life in general (women in Azerbaijan and Ghana, youth in Kyrgyzstan and indigenous communities in Bolivia).
Twelve young women who took part in an 18-month long EC-funded rural leadership project in Azerbaijan were elected to municipal posts during the 2010 municipal elections.

The Leadership School for Young Women was established in five rural areas of Azerbaijan and 125 young women selected for training in the theory and practical skills of leadership. All participants were local residents and had to be involved in various types of social and political activity to qualify, willing to put the knowledge and skills acquired into practice to create better conditions in their local community.

Among them were representatives of local women groups, youth and human rights organizations and other NGOs, youth sections of political parties, local authorities, municipalities, employees of state entities, trade-unions, teachers, national and cultural associations, and journalists.

With the aim of promoting their roles in public and civic life at local, regional and national levels, the women had access to an experienced team of trainers, experts and consultants as well as training materials and equipment.

As well as being taught to problem-solve and be able to deal with a broad range of development and management activities, the women left the Leadership School prepared to make a practical contribution to democratic reform. They’re also likely to become active advocates of women’s rights within a strong regional network of young political and public female leaders.

The Leadership School is expected to develop into a permanent autonomous educational institution with branches in different regions of Azerbaijan.

The European Union recognises the interdependence of all human rights. The indivisibility of civil and political rights from economic, social and cultural rights is a fundamental tenet of international human rights law as illustrated in the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights which encompasses both dimensions.

In a world where a large part of the population is hungry, lacks access to safe drinking water or to health services and has no adequate housing, the importance of a strong commitment to the full realisation of economic, social and cultural rights becomes self-evident.

Failure to protect these rights can have serious consequences. For example, malnutrition has a clear health impact, while forced evictions can result in homelessness, the loss of livelihood and the destruction of social networks with serious psychological effects.

The denial of economic, social and cultural rights can lead to violations of other human rights. It is often harder for individuals who cannot read and write to find work, to take part in political activity or to exercise their freedom of expression.

While the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural rights provides a comprehensive overview of the various rights involved, it is important that they are further described in other conventions like the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, to cite but a few.

The European Instrument for Democracy and Human Rights supports a large variety of projects to advance economic, social and cultural rights worldwide. These project have contributed to strengthening trade unions in Armenia and Fiji, to improved access to safe drinking water and basic sanitation in Costa Rica, to the recognition of small-scale fair trade producers in Egypt, and to the increased involvement of citizens in the budgeting process in Kazakhstan, as well as greater awareness about the right to health and education in Sudan and Zimbabwe.

During 2007–2010, the EIDHR funded nearly 100 projects worth more than €18 million to promote the respect of core labour standards and corporate social responsibility, and to protect the right to food, health, and water and sanitation. A number of projects tackle the sensitive issue of land reform and many others promote advocacy and civil society networks. These projects highlight the fact that human rights and development policies are mutually reinforcing and that the links between poverty, discrimination, inequality, health and other unfulfilled rights have a bearing on achieving the Millennium Development Goals.
FOCUS ON
Campaigning for Clean Clothes

Although the cost of living in the majority of garment-producing countries is cheap, workers are often not paid enough to cover their basic needs, such as food, shelter, or clothing. In an estimate of a €100 pair of sports shoes made in the Far East, just €0.50 goes to production workers’ wages.

The Clean Clothes Campaign is dedicated to ensuring that factory workers are fairly treated and decently paid. It acts as an urgent action network and sounds the alarm when workers’ rights are violated – these can range from poor working conditions, low or no wages, harassment, violence, suspension, dismissals and – in some cases – death.

Based on the premise that the public has a right to know where and how their clothes and sports shoes are produced, the EU has supported this defence of workers’ human rights over three years. Cases recorded by the CCC, early this year, include daily harassment and threats to workers protesting against conditions that include working weeks in excess of 80 hours with no sanitary provisions, wages below survival level, unsafe buildings and lack of ventilation. Two cases concerned the killing of 85 workers.

The CCC relies on a network of trade unions and NGOs in 15 European countries, and more than 200 unions, individuals and organisations to identify local problems and objectives in most countries where garments are produced. The CCC does not generally endorse boycotts which rarely change anything and often lead to workers losing the little income they have. Rather, the CCC urges well known brands to work out improvement plans with factories to meet good labour standards.

The CCC has taken up more than 250 cases and many have been resolved: health and safety conditions improved; dismissed workers reinstated; unions recognised and activists released from prison. Some brand name companies have responded by adopting codes of conduct and drafting policies on corporate responsibility, considered an important first step in the process of abolishing sweatshop conditions.

Conflict prevention and conflict resolution are essential elements of the EU’s overall policy for promoting human rights and democratisation. The fight against impunity for human rights violators is a cornerstone of the EU’s approach to building and maintaining lasting peace, international justice and the rule of law. This is why the EU gives strong support – political, financial and technical – to the effective functioning of the International Criminal Court (ICC) and other criminal tribunals.

The UN Charter and Article 11 of the Treaty of the EU commit the Union to consolidating the rule of law, respect for human rights, preserving peace and strengthening international security.

This political commitment has been implemented by the European Instrument for Democracy and Human Rights which has financed more than 90 projects worth about €42 million in the field of international justice, transitional justice, and the promotion of peaceful reconciliation. It also supports mediation efforts at local level and the creation of truth and reconciliation commissions.

The direct support for the ICC, provided under EIDHR, significantly contributes to the annual training seminar of lawyers on its List of Counsel, the Visiting Professional and Internship Programme, and the creation of a comprehensive electronic database gathering relevant jurisprudence.

Civil society also plays a key role in support for the ICC. The beneficiaries here include the Coalition for the International Criminal Court, a network of about 2,500 organisations around the world working together to strengthen international cooperation with the ICC.

Activities include the coordination of national, regional and global advocacy campaigns on the ratification of the Rome Statute (the legal basis for the ICC), the monitoring and reporting on the activities of the ICC, and the provision of technical assistance and capacity building.

As a contribution to maintaining lasting peace in the region, the EU has supported the Outreach Programme of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY) which helps cement the Tribunal’s achievements.

Because the legacy of systematic human rights violations committed during violent conflicts and repressive rule can be long-lasting, substantial support has also been given to transitional justice projects. These include promoting criminal prosecutions, gender justice and security sector reform in East Africa, Peru and Haiti. In Guatemala, the EIDHR supported a project to help trace persons who have disappeared, while several projects assisted communities in obtaining reparations. Other projects, including those linked to UN Security Council Resolutions 1325 and 1820 on violence against women in conflict situations, have also contributed directly to transitional justice efforts.

FOCUS ON
Truth Commission Wins Support throughout Former Yugoslavia

An EU-supported campaign to establish a truth commission to examine abuses committed during the wars waged on the territory of the former Yugoslavia is rapidly gaining widespread favour throughout the region.

The Presidents of both Serbia and Croatia have recently endorsed the planned truth seeking body, an initiative of civil society organisations from all the former Yugoslav states. Important political support has also come from Members of the Montenegrin Parliament and the Chairman of the Slovenian Parliament.

Amid an aggressive media and PR campaign, organisers are now attempting to raise a million signatures from citizens throughout the western Balkans as a means of putting pressure on governments to endorse the commission as an official truth telling body.

The campaign for RECOM, as the proposed commission is known, wants to establish an independent and official regional commission to establish the facts about the past and guarantee the right of all victims to truth about the conflicts. But supporters say that if it is to have serious impact, the commission must be recognised as an official body endorsed by governments, and not only a civil society initiative detached and isolated from the corridors of power.

Encouraged by meeting former commissioners from truth commissions in South Africa, Sierra Leone, East Timor, and Peru, the campaign is holding public consultations throughout the region. Participants have included victims and victims’ families, human rights activists, NGOs, youth, political parties, local authorities, legal institutions, and war veterans. Their suggestions and recommendations will be reflected in a draft Statute that will be presented to governments on June 1, 2011.

The EU regularly supports worldwide and regional campaigns targeting concrete steps forward in the promotion of democracy and human rights.

The EIDHR is deeply committed to protecting human rights and fundamental freedoms, financing more than 100 projects worth about €50 million between 2007 and 2010. These projects concerned protection for human rights defenders, plus support for freedom of expression and association, and freedom of religion and belief. They also provided funding for human rights protection bodies and mechanisms. This part of the compendium presents a broad selection of these projects.

Support for human rights defenders has long been part of the European Union’s external policy on human rights. The EU Guidelines on Human Rights Defenders were adopted in 2004. They provide practical recommendations to streamline EU actions in this field. The guidelines, which build on the 1998 UN Declaration on Human Rights Defenders, represent the political framework which enables the EIDHR to channel financial support to defenders.

Through the EIDHR, the EU supports human rights defenders against repression and the arbitrary exercise of power, and seeks to provide swift assistance to human rights defenders at risk. It also aims at reinforcing their ability to do their human rights work in the medium and longer term. The EIDHR can provide urgent financial or material support for human rights defenders under direct personal threat. In addition to support channelled through our partners, the European Commission manages a small facility to provide ad-hoc grants of up to €10 000 for human rights defenders in need of urgent help.

The EIDHR currently co-finances 11 projects to support human rights defenders around the world with the organisations listed below. These organisations are described according to their own specifications.

Although the EIDHR publishes details of where its money goes and to whom, it also funds activities in many sensitive areas where a high degree of confidentiality is required. More than €50 million were allocated from 2007 to 2010 to very sensitive projects in areas and countries in which human rights and fundamental freedoms are most at risk. The precise activities and the beneficiaries are kept confidential.

The main areas of these activities are independent media and freedom of expression, freedom of association, the fight against discrimination of target groups (religious and ethnic minorities, lesbians and gays), etc. EIDHR funds projects to support freedom of association, to protect trade union activists and promote freedom of conscience (the right to object to military service on conscientious grounds) in countries involved in armed conflicts.
As a reporter on Azerbaijan’s first independent daily newspaper Azadliq, Agil Khalil survived two murder attempts as a result of attempting to cover a story. He had to leave the country to save his life. His editor has spent time in prison and several of his former colleagues are still detained. Khalil is one of numerous journalists in exile helped by Reporters Without Borders, an organisation dedicated to defending freedom of the press, assisting journalists threatened, repressed or attacked by authorities solely because of the kind of information they provide.

EU aid through EIDHR worth 616,000 euros over a period of three years has helped Reporters Without Borders fund a help desk in Paris which coordinates a rapid response to calls for assistance from all media at risk, under threat or in difficulty. The organisation provides legal aid to journalists in prison or on trial and financial aid to their dependants and to the families of murdered journalists. It funds medical expenses where necessary, helps obtain visas for media forced to flee their countries and subsidises accommodation for displaced journalists.

They include journalists like Amanuel Ghirmai who fled his job in Eritrea to avoid prison for not supporting the government line. A Somali journalist who recently escaped over the border to Kenya from is still in fear of his life following death threats from Islamist militias; Reporters Without Borders will help him with his application for asylum. Burmese and Rwandan journalists are among those living in exile in France.

The work of Reporters Without Borders is not solely concerned with helping journalists in countries where repressive regimes attempt to silence media outlets that question them. EU financial assistance has also enabled Reporters Without Borders help keep the presses going on three independent newspapers hit by the recent flooding in Pakistan’s Swat Valley.

As well as being able to supply computer equipment and broadcast material to struggling media, RSF has also been able to provide bullet-proof vests, helmets and first-aid kits for journalists working in hostile regions and can arrange for war zone insurance at preferential rates.

Gender and women's rights

Around the world, millions of women and girls suffer discrimination simply by being women. Many are marginalised. They often face double discrimination if they belong to an indigenous group, or they are disabled, or they are fleeing from one country to another. Some have been victims of several kinds of violence.

The EIDHR helps to empower and protect these women and girls by actively supporting women’s human rights activists and gender equality advocates and their networks. It funds projects which enable women to engage effectively in decision-making processes, voice their rights to fulfilment in all spheres, defend themselves against all forms of discrimination and ensure protection from and redress for all forms of gender-based violence. This includes in particular the prosecution of the perpetrators of such violence.

In so doing, the EIDHR contributes to the implementation of the EU Guidelines on Violence against Women and all forms of discrimination against them which constitutes the framework for EIDHR action and marks the EU’s clear political will to treat women’s rights as a priority and to take long-term action in that field. In this section of the compendium, nearly 170 gender-specific projects are listed for a total value of more than €28 million.

The mainstreaming of the protection and promotion of women’s rights across all EU policy areas has been a key priority for the EIDHR.

As a result, many projects with a relevant gender component are listed in this compendium under other thematic EIDHR activities. On this basis, it is estimated that in 2007-2010 about 20% of EIDHR projects worldwide promoted and protected women and girls’ rights either as a specific or as a secondary priority (around 240 projects with a value of some €40 million).

Some examples:
Increasing the participation of women in the electoral process in Ghana (four EIDHR projects targeting women’s participation and leadership in different regions of Ghana. EU total combined contribution: €1 158 332);

Empowering local community women leaders to become better decision-makers and negotiators in Guatemala (Generando Governabilidad – Derechos Humanos mujeres y jovenes, by Fundacion Mundubat. EU Contribution: €419 506);

Enhancing political representation and participation of indigenous marginalised rural women in election processes in South Kordofan State, Sudan (Towards active participation in the election process, by Sudanese Development Call Organisation Association. EU contribution: €60 000, targeting women among the Nuba population);

Protecting women against domestic violence through training, law reforms, assistance and dialogue in Mexico (Living without violence in the State of Mexico: eradicating domestic violence against women and children, by Mexico Unido Pro Derechos Humanos. EU contribution: €81 078);

FOCUS ON
Stop Early and Exchange Marriage in Yemen

A quarter of the female population of Yemen gets married between the ages of 10 and 14 years old, with the average age of marriage for females 15.9. Women in rural areas are particularly victims of early and exchange marriage, often from poor households, let go by their families to ease the financial burden. Lack of education is also a leading cause of persistent gender-based violence issues — without education, women and girls remain worst placed than men and vulnerable to threats in their society.

The Charitable Society for Social Welfare (CSSW), a leading NGO in Yemen is fighting to stop early marriage and the practice of exchanging wives by increasing educational enrolment for girls and reducing poverty in rural areas practising early marriage and exchange marriage.

An EU project is supporting the CSSW’s initiative ‘Stop early marriage and exchange marriage’ that increases the practice of law and Islamic values to protect women’s rights.

As well as enrolling girls in schools, the project is giving women from poor households the opportunity to start income-generating businesses by giving them micro-credit loans, along with business training and a business monitoring service from loan officers. Using their skills and business techniques, they are more likely to secure a source of income making them less vulnerable and more independent.

This project also targets professionals such as lawyers, judges, imams, public speakers, journalists and teachers — male as well as female — by involving them in awareness raising activities of the rights of woman and children, including the negative consequences of early and exchange marriage.

Since the proclamation by the UN General Assembly in 1994 of the United Nations Decade for Human Rights Education, the EU has made decisive contributions to human rights education and training through a big increase in its human rights education and capacity-building activities and budget.

The different EIDHR-funded projects and programmes represent one of the most significant factors supporting human rights education goals. They also reflect Europe’s own commitment to a culture built on the values of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, pluralist democracy and the rule of law, to face the challenges of exacerbated nationalism, racism, xenophobia, terrorism, and organised crime.

An important example of our commitment is support for the activities organised by the European Inter-University Centre (EIUC), including the European Master’s Degree in Human Rights and Democratisation (E.MA), and for five other Regional Masters in Human Rights and Democratisation.

Created in 1997, the E.MA is a unique human rights education project established through the joint efforts of 41 universities from all 27 EU member states, the Italian region of Veneto, and the municipality of Venice. The success of the E.MA has served as a valuable reference point for the promotion of human rights education outside the EU, both in neighbouring regions and globally.

The five regional programmes currently funded by the EIDHR are the European Regional Masters in Human Rights and Democracy in South-Eastern Europe – ERMA (University of Sarajevo), LLM in Human Rights and Democratisation in Africa (University of Pretoria), Asia-Pacific Master (University of Sydney), the Latin American Master (UNSAM-Buenos Aires) and the Eastern Partnership Regional Masters in D&HR – (University of Yerevan).

Creating or reinforcing civil society networks for human rights is another key area of intervention for EIDHR. The aim is to develop inclusive democratic practices at local level, and reinforce the role of civil society in monitoring and reporting the implementation of international obligations in various countries.

The promotion of a human rights culture is also achieved through the dissemination of documentation and training materials in local languages. Many projects target the youth and legal and judiciary professionals as well as the media. Human rights training for police forces and prison officials plays a big role in preventing violations, while stimulating the dialogue on intercultural, civic and human rights issues can play a vital role in conflict prevention.

EIDHR has funded more than 110 projects for a total value of more than €37 million for human rights education, training and awareness-raising, together with capacity-building for civil society organisations to foster their advocacy role.
FOCUS ON

Fighting Infringements in Kyrgyz Army

Working with the Kyrgyzstan Ministry of Defence and a local NGO 'Soldiers’ Mothers, Kyrgyzstan' – involved in the protection of human rights and civil education of military men since 1994 – an EU project was able to help improve Human Rights awareness and conditions for conscripts in the Kyrgyz National Army.

Praised by military commanding officers, the project was inspired by a lack of public knowledge of human rights in the Central Asian and former Soviet Republic of Kyrgyzstan, particularly in the army about soldiers’ duties and rights, leading to arbitrary treatment and a lack of resistance to legal infringements. Imprisoned soldiers suffering from an absence of legal support and bad nutrition and shelter were also informed of their rights and given legal advice.

The project allowed more than 1000 soldiers to receive legal advice and psychological support. An estimated 90,000 citizens were informed of actual conditions in military units through media campaigns including a prime time TV documentary and the targeting of 2300 publications.

After human and civil rights training held in his military unit, Colonel Kanybek Iskakov commented: “We, the commanding officers, were surprised by the creativity of our soldiers during these training sessions and by their good knowledge of legal matters... after their return to their homes, they will train their countrymen about election rights.”

Racism and discrimination

The EIDHR helps civil society organisations to defend the rights of minorities and other vulnerable groups and to stop racism and xenophobia. Groups at risk include ethnic and religious minorities, migrants, indigenous peoples, members of lesbian and gay communities and people with disabilities. The EIDHR funded more than 200 projects targeting discrimination and racism between 2007 and 2010 for a value of more than €33 million. Projects concerning discrimination against women are included in the section on women’s rights in this compendium.

Many states contain ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities whose fundamental freedoms and human rights are open to abuse. Generally, these minority communities are poorer, face discrimination, have less power and influence. They also have less access to remedies to tackle their problems. Entrenched discrimination on ethnic or religious grounds is a common precursor to conflict. Poverty is closely linked to political exclusion.

The rights of indigenous peoples are a key priority of the European Instrument for Democracy and Human Rights which has funded some 40 specific projects worth more than €11 million. The goals are to increase indigenous peoples’ rights and capacity to control their own social, economic and cultural development, while enhancing their land rights and the sustainable management of biological resources. In some countries, indigenous peoples are not recognised, suffering discrimination and exclusion.

In other cases, indigenous communities are not consulted or informed on activities or programmes affecting their territories.

Gender identity and sexual orientation are still used as justifications for serious human rights violations around the world. Lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people constitute a vulnerable group and continue to be victims of persecution, discrimination and gross ill-treatment, often involving extreme forms of violence. Through the EIDHR, the EU supports several projects defending the rights of LGBTI people. One project, for example, empowers civil society to challenge homophobic laws and discrimination against LGBTI people, and to provide emergency psychosocial, medical, mediation and reintegration assistance.

EIDHR also provided more than €20 million to help migrants and other marginalised groups like the elderly, persons affected by HIV/AIDS, internally displaced people (IDPs) and refugees. Persons with disabilities are often among the most marginalised groups in society, particularly in developing countries. People with disabilities lack the opportunities of mainstream society and many are denied their basic human rights. Moreover a disproportionate number of people live in poverty because they are victims of social exclusion and prejudice. The EIDHR supports more than 40 specific projects which fight against the discrimination suffered by disabled people, by strengthening the capacity of civil society organisations and activists. Some projects have the ultimate objective of getting governments to sign, ratify and implement the UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNCRPD) and its associated optional protocol.
FOCUS ON
Rights of Sexual and Gender Diversity in Bolivia

Although the Constitution of Bolivia allows for punishment of any type of discrimination toward lesbians, gays, bisexuals and transgenders (LGBT) who live and work in the country, they still suffer violence, discrimination and harassment in the work place on a daily basis.

An EU project is supporting the Dutch Humanist Institute for Development Cooperation (Hivos), cooperating with a local LGBT association, to raise awareness of sexual and gender diversity in Bolivia and the rights of lesbians, gays, bisexuals and transgenders.

As well as holding a number of workshops on learning about LGBT civil rights and on how to identify homophobia, lesbophobia and transphobia and work against it, Hivos prepared a Gay Pride raising the visibility of LGBT people. The march attracted four thousand spectators on June 28 in the city of La Paz. People from 13 public and private institutions took part, alongside 17 LGBT groups, after attending meetings and workshops.

The project has led to greater openness and the involvement of La Paz government officials with LGBT themes and events and has given LGBT people in the city more public visibility, reducing discrimination and stigmatisation.

Although most countries have ratified the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child and its two optional protocols, many children in the world still suffer serious abuses. Children are victims of violence in their homes, or they may be forced to live in the streets and beg. Others are sold, trafficked or used for the worst forms of labour exploitation as in the mining sector, or even forced into prostitution. Some children have been deprived of their liberty and live in care institutions because they faced problems with the law or for any other reason – like being orphaned. These children have to be protected from violence and abuses while residing in these institutions and a child-friendly juvenile justice system must be ensured. In other cases, children are recruited to fight in armed conflicts and as such are exposed to extreme mental and physical pressure with a disastrous impact on their lives and further development.

Children must be protected and their rights promoted and defended at all times. The EU Guidelines on the Rights of the Child (2007) and the EU Guidelines on Children Affected by Armed Conflicts (2003, updated in 2008 and in 2010) are the practical basis for EU actions to protect children’s rights. These guidelines seek to promote the rights of the child worldwide through the implementation of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child and its optional protocols, and by ensuring that the rights of the child are taken into account in all EU policies and actions.

From 2007 to 2010, 11% of EIDHR funding was devoted specifically to 141 projects for children with a total value of more than €28 million.

However this figure shows only part of the picture. The protection and promotion of children’s rights have been mainstreamed in many projects which are presented in other thematic areas of EIDHR activities. Thus the actual number of EIDHR projects, which have a relevant children’s rights component is close to 200 with an overall value of more than €38 million.

EIDHR projects focus on an extensive range of activities to benefit directly children involved in armed conflicts (both prevention and rehabilitation), and to combat domestic violence, child trafficking, child prostitution and child pornography. Other projects target juvenile justice and the prevention of violence against children at large. Actions to promote children’s rights also include the development of child welfare strategies and protection networks, the formulation of child protection policies and the intensification of efforts progressively to eliminate child labour.
Kidnapped aged 15 by rebel militia in DR Congo, given lighter guns than the men so they could carry them and often under the influence of drugs, twin sisters Naomi and Fuhara spent three years fighting on the front line. Although the conflict in DR Congo is officially finished, continued violence in the eastern region makes it one of the most dangerous places in the world to be a young girl or woman.

The twins are now under the protective umbrella of an EU project in the region managed by War Child to help the recovery and reintegration of 800 girls affected by armed conflict.

Poverty, displacement and the breakdown of families, killed or separated, have left children vulnerable to exploitation and abuse. Girls living on the streets are vulnerable to rape and sexual violence. Many are forced into prostitution to support themselves. Helping them return to school with literacy and numeracy classes and vocational training is a way of helping them find alternatives to sex work.

As well as rehabilitating former child soldiers, the War Child project sets out to protect girls at risk of being recruited or enlisted by the military – half the population of DR Congo is under 18 years old and with unemployment in the region among young people running at 95%, militia life becomes attractive.

The lives of a number of poverty-stricken girls are currently being turned round by being taught how to read and write. Given professional training so they can work as tailors, hairdressers or cooks, they should eventually be able to support themselves. The girls are also given psychosocial support, as in the case of a 12 year old accused of being a witch by her family and community and threatened with death. The project helps provide her with protection and temporary shelter, continued schooling and care from social workers and a psychologist.
