According to MetLife, the existing regulatory dialogue on insurance btw the US and the EU is useful. However, they would like to see a "more of political push", which the negotiations could give. They don't have specific issues they would like to address neither on the EU or the US side, they would be rather interested in establishing a new framework for tackling issues whenever they appear.

MetLife was also concerned that insurance could be carve-out from the scope of the agreement. RS assured that the EU has a comprehensive approach to these negotiations, but due to institutional differences it is easier for us to cover regulatory issues than for the US. Therefore, we need the industry support in encouraging the US to the ambitious approach.
